

Introduction to the Legislation

From December 2003, when the Employment Equality (Religion or Belief) Regulations came into force, it became unlawful to discriminate against workers because of religion or similar belief.

The Regulations require that workers of all religions or beliefs should feel welcome and safe in their workplace and the dignity of all should be respected.